First Boulder City Marshal Sworn-in Today

BOULDER CITY – Boulder City swore in its first City Marshal for the Police Department Tuesday and has plans to add a second to assist Boulder City Police Officers provide security at Council Meetings and other city events.

Police Chief Tim Shea gave the oath of office to Marshal Pamela Purkey at a ceremony at City Hall. She is scheduled to work at upcoming City Council meetings. The part-time City Marshal positions will help provide professional police service while being fiscally responsible to the City and its residents.

Marshal Purkey is a Category I officer through Nevada's Peace Officers' Standards and Training Commission, meaning she can enforce local and state laws and make arrests. All City Marshals for Boulder City are required to be a Category I or II officer.

"Our first priority is and will always be public safety," Chief Shea said. "Adding City Marshals will allow the Boulder City Police Department to continue to provide exceptional law enforcement protection at City events while providing for cost savings."

Currently two Police Officers are working overtime to staff City Council meetings. Chief Shea said he will staff the meetings with one Police Officer and one City Marshal.

Marshal Purkey was previously a Boulder City Municipal Court Marshal prior to joining the Police Department as its first City Marshal.
